REMARKS [REDACTED]

25X1X SOURCE [REDACTED]

1. The Soviet radio station at Nordperd (N 55/P 95), east of Goehren, was occupied in late July 1950, by eight men wearing red-bordered black epaulets and on [REDACTED] by one officer and eight men. Since the installation was guarded it could not be approached. A local resident said that the two men who are usually on duty in the radio station frequently stay outside but rush into the hut as soon as a plane is seen. The noise of engines is allegedly heard from the installation.

2. The radio installation was removed on [REDACTED] A wooden shed, guarded by a sentry, was recently erected about 1 1/2 km farther to the west. No telephone lines or antennae were seen. * On [REDACTED] a wooden pole about 1 1/2 meters high was set up about 15 meters from the new wooden shed. A slack line was fastened at the masthead and led to a window of the hut from where the noise of engines was heard. Eight soldiers wearing red-bordered black epaulets were seen.

3. On [REDACTED] radar set was seen on Fahrenberg southwest of Rinz (N 55/P 85). Local residents said that the set had been there since 25 October 1950.  The operating personnel consisted of one officer and seven naval soldiers who were quartered in a confiscated building next to the set. No motor vehicles were seen near the set.

* [REDACTED] Comment. The set was previously described. See [REDACTED] A set of the same type was previously seen in the vicinity of the Bug airfield.

The service color of the operating personnel indicates that the installations apparently do not belong to the air force. This is the first information on the removal of the installation near Nordperd. For location of installation, see Annex.

 [REDACTED] Comment. A schematic sketch which was produced by source but not forwarded indicates that the radar set is of the same type as those seen on airfields in the Soviet Zone of Germany where a fighter division or corps headquarters is stationed. The set possibly belongs to a unit of the Baltic Sea naval air force.
